MARKET REVIEW

As bond yields rose global REITs (FTSE/EPRA NAREIT Developed Rental Index) expectedly corrected, closing -6.8% lower for the month. All regions showed negative returns with Hong Kong leading at -3.4% and the UK lagging at -7.7% (chart 1). US 10-year Treasury yields rose 16bps in Feb, peaking at 2.95% but closing at 2.86%. Despite US bonds correcting more in January (45bps) as compared to February market expectations shifted as Core PCE inflation, at 1.5%, is now expected to breach 2% towards Q4:2018, and the US Federal Reserve Bank (Fed) could hike four times in 2018; one more than initially expected. Incoming Fed Chairman Jerome Powell also 'stoked the fire' by stating that the US economy was fundamentally strong, and that wage pressure was on the horizon, giving credence to bond bears. Europe's economy continues to recover but the political picture remains shaky; on 4 March 2018 Angela Merkel managed to secure a German coalition government with her as Chancellor for the fourth term. On the other hand, Italian elections surprised with centre-right, anti-immigration parties, led by Five Star Movement fared better this round. Negotiations to form a coalition government are underway.

Given the change in sentiment, market expectations have priced in a 100% probability of a 25bp Fed hike this March. Bond yield views have also adjusted accordingly with most estimates suggesting US Treasury yields could move higher than the initial expectations of 2.75% to around 3.25%. Given nominal US GDP of 4.5-5% for 2018 and a long-term nominal GDP-Bond yield spread of 1.4%, bonds could indeed settle around 3.35% although we see downside risk to this forecast as the European Central Bank (ECB) continues to stimulate and the Bank of Japan continues with its 'target 0%' policy control measures. Further the ECB is expected to start hiking in the second half of 2019 which puts upward pressure on EU bonds in the medium term. So, in some ways after many false starts the bond bears but may finally have their way in 2018.

In simple terms, higher than initially expected bond yields are not good for REIT returns in the short term. And, the 6.8% correction in February (-8.03% year to date) despite a modest 16bp rise in bond yields suggests this has partly played out. Recent studies have shown that each 50bp hike in bond yields translates into a 4-5% correction on REIT share prices, and a change in sentiment results in a large knee-jerk correction followed by a significant recovery 3-6 month after. From our standpoint REITs show value offering a 4.3% dividend yield with 5-6% earnings growth over the next 2 years, but, with a higher year end bond outlook (from 2.8% to 3.3%) we have to trim back our calendar year returns from 7-9% to approximately 5% in USD; just because we love the sector, doesn't always mean it's pretty.
